Investment Portfolio Trends 2023: Looking in the Mirror

By Kevin McCullough, CFA®

After a 2022 that challenged both stocks and bonds, equity markets experienced a significant recovery in 2023. Natixis Investment Managers Solutions portfolio consultants monitor asset classes, investment products and market action, both in real time and from a historical perspective. In our analysis of 2023 portfolio trends, we note that many of the portfolio shifts aimed at mitigating damage during 2022 are beginning to unwind now that markets seem on calmer footing.

#1 – Risk Drives Return

While the top performing portfolios in 2022 had the most cash and the least equity, this phenomenon reversed during 2023. The best performing portfolios last year were the ones that took the most risk, with the greatest allocations to equity and the smallest allocations to cash.

#2 – Shrinking Value Bias

Similarly, value as a style peaked in the first quarter of 2022, with over two-thirds of equity sleeves showing a value bias. That percentage has been declining ever since, and based on our latest data, less than half of the equity sleeves we observe still show that value bias. This is not terribly surprising given performance – 2022 saw broadly negative equity performance but the one sector that bucked that trend was energy, which typically sees more inclusion in value portfolios.

With the remarkable outperformance of the Magnificent 7 and the technology sector in 2023, it makes sense that we are starting to see portfolio positioning follow in terms of incrementally more growth and less value exposure. That said, there does seem to be some skepticism about the rapid recovery in the US large cap growth space and we have not yet seen the overall growth tilt return to its prior highs.

#3 – Inflation Takes a Back Seat

Explicit positions to hedge against rising inflation such as TIPS, real estate and precious metals also peaked during the early quarters of 2022 at about 4.3% of portfolios. This number has declined to just over 2.5% in our latest data, suggesting fears of persistent inflation are waning at the margin as year-over-year CPI increases have declined.

#4 – Locking It In

In fixed income, we continue to observe the average duration exposure extending, now creeping up to 4.7 years. Short Government, Ultrashort Bond and Short-Term Bond were the three fixed income Morningstar categories that saw the greatest outflows as portfolio duration lengthened. There appears to be less fear of holding intermediate-term duration now that the market believes most of the Fed’s inflation fight is behind us.

#5 – Sticking the Landing

We saw a great deal of divergence in performance of portfolios where equity exposures were positioned differently according to our “Cyclical versus Inflation” framework. The portfolios most positioned for “soft landing” saw the greatest returns while portfolios most positioned for “stagflation” lagged behind.
